RICHMOND, June 17, 12 m - The situation grows more and more grave. Grapt is rapidly unfeiding his plans, and thus far they are pre-cisely the same that were foreshadowed in these letters some weeks ago. It is not known here whother be has moved the bulk of his army to the south side of James giver, though it is well established, that Hancock's and Smith's corps, and a pertien, if not all of Burnside's, are across the river. He is building extensive wharves from Swineyard's to Wilcox's landing on the north side and opposite to Fleur de Han-dred on the south side, where the water is of sufficient depth to float vessels of the largest engaged in throwing up intrenchments to cover the approaches to this part of the river from Richmond, and to prevent parties from getting below and firing upon his transports. It has been suggested that these works, being on the north bank, are a blind, and that the real move nent will be made on the south side against Petersburg, and the railroads terminating there. But would Grant build such extensive works for the sample purpose of misleading his adversary, and then ron away and leave them? His conduct at Cold Harbor, where he dug thousands of rifle plts, and threw ap six parallel lines of intrenchments, intersected in some places by dened, furnishes an answer. He broke up the depot established at the White House, and regoved the cars, engines, railroad iron and bridge timber which he had brought to that point, and changed his base from the York to the James river. What he has done once, nay, three times already in this rapidly shifting campaign, he can and will do again, if not prevented. He has moved on the principle of the screw, the next turn of which will carry him acound bahind Petersburg and the Appomattox, and across me of our chief lines of railway.

Indeed, he is laiready within three miles o Petersburg. On Wednesday morning, the 15th, the enemy, about three thousand strong, advanced up the south side of the Appomation by the City Point road and engaged our forces, consisting of the 4th North Carolina and Graham's (Petersburg) battery, at Baylor's farm, some six graven miles from Petersburg, and finally compelled the Confederates to abandon their partition. Later in the day, it was discovered. sition. Later in the day it was discovered that the enemy was pressing his advantages and massing a heavy force, say ten or twelve thousand men, against our outer line of tortifications, three miles out from town.
